I was blessed to be Heathers grandma. She was a precocious little girl who danced on her table in kindergarten. I've never felt such intense pain but my faith in God will carry me through She was a fun loving mother and often told me , Grandma my boys are my reason for getting up in the morning an out family will do all within our power to keep her memory alive and help them on the path before them. Psalm 34:18. The Lord is near to the broken hearted and saved the crushed in spirit

I can't tell you how much pain my heart feels from losing my sweet niece! I've lived that kid from the moment she entered this world with that head full of dark hair and big bright blue eyes! Being basically a live-in nanny for my sister (her mother) for years, I spent a lot of time with Heather most of her early years. She was hilarious and told the most far fetched stories at age 4 that would have us laughing so hard (much like her son Mickey is starting to do now). I always tried to let her know how proud I was of her and how much I loved her . She reminded me so much of my mom (her Nana) with her sweet, kind spirit that never turned any person away and didn't judge anyone. She accepted and loved everyone and only wanted the same in return. I will miss her SOOOOO much. I know God will carry us through this but it's still so hard to accept and tbh I'm still dealing with the anger of it. I know that will pass in time but the longing to speak to her and hug her at least once more will be a forever longing until the day I enter Heaven's gates and see that sweet girl again! I promise to continue to tell her babies how much she loved them and keep her memory alive! I promise to love them like I loved her! I will read them Winnie-The-Pooh just like I did to her as much as they will sit still and let me. I love you sweet girl and I can't wait to see you again!
