“ He always seemed more like a brother than a cousin. We loved to "rag" on each other all the time and if you didn't know better you would have thought we were fighting, but we weren't; that's just the way we were. Let someone else start something and they had both of us to deal with. I always looked forward to summer vacation so we could hang out. He enjoyed coming to the city and I enjoyed coming to the country. He's in a better place now but he'll definitely be missed.

“ When I lost my youngest son, Uncle Bill come to the service. He approached me, gave me a hug and told me, no one should have to go through burying their child, most especially you. Always made me feel that I was of some importance to him. Will always cherish that!
